Michael Steele, the former lieutenant governor of Maryland and a leading conservative analyst appeared with political commentator Roland Martin at Seabrook Auditorium. From opposite sides of the political aisle, Martin was an announced supporter of Barack Obama; Steele supported John McCain and served as head GOPAC, a Republican political action committee. For nearly two hours on October 14, 2008, the two shared their thoughts and prescriptions on issues such as illegal immigration; the military, HBCU's and the presidential election. They offered detailed, frank analysis of all issues and Martin criticized the choice of Sarah Palin as a vice presidential nominee. He accused her and the media of using what was suggested to be racially charged code words and phrases such as "soccer mom", "NASCAR dad" and "Joe Six Pack" to reference white Americans. In this, Steele accused Martin of over-generalizing and stated that blacks in his home county often took their children to soccer games, though the NASCAR term was unexplainable. The election wasn't the only hot button issue they tackled. Both men agreed that black colleges do not demand enough financial support from alumni, that admissions standards are loosen to the detriment of universities, and that the economic crisis would force old-fashioned, conservative spending habits. Before closing to a standing ovation, Martin and Steele challenged the audience to do more to support U.S. soldiers.

Roland Martin & Michael Steele

On November 11, 2008 in Seabrook Auditorium, Donna Brazile made her first speech since the election of Sen. Barack Obama as the nation's next president. A Democratic strategist, Brazile worked on a presidential campaign in every election since 1984. In speaking to the audience, she mentioned the importance of coming South first to celebrate the historic victory at the polls. Chancellor Anderson, in his introduction of the guest speaker, also touched on the historic nature of the election and that the day should forever be known simply as "11/4". Dr. Anderson praised Brazile's work in past campaigns. In her speech, Brazile spoke of her experience as a strategist, columnist and contributor to CNN and ABC News, but focused mainly on her euphoria after the election of the nation's first black president. Well received by those in attendance, she described her delight on election night when not just Florida, but several other states that had voted Republican, turned to the Democratic nominee. Though his election would not cure the racial ills that have plagued the nation, Brazile said Obama's election was a step in the right direction. She pointed out that it took more than the black vote, but a coalition of all types, to put him in office and to prove that hate is not a strategy for victory. In her closing remarks, Brazile paraphrased Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., by saying that Obama's character far outweighed the color of his skin.

Donna Brazile

"Chef Jeff" Henderson

Having grown up in South Central Los Angeles, Chef Jeff Henderson never had a refrigerator full of food. On December 4, 2008 he shared his recipes for success and explained how food changed his life. The Food Network star, appearing in Scabrook Auditorium, was a product of what he called "generational poverty." For Chef Jeff, the key to escaping the cycle was knowledge. He obtained it by reading books while serving 10 years in federal prison for drug trafficking. Though he is not proud of that fact, Henderson says it's something that changed his life and where he found his passion for cooking. Chef Jeff started out as a dishwasher in his first job after leaving prison and is now an executive chef. Henderson stars in the Food Network reality show "The Chef Jeff Project" which is aimed at changing the lives of six struggling young adults through the power of food. During his presentation he spoke about the importance of education and the dangers of society's temptations. He credits food for giving him a second chance in life. Bitter upon entering prison, he began reading and became addicted to knowledge. Since then, Chef Jeff Henderson has written "Cooked", the story of his life, which appeared on The New York Times bestseller list and is slated to be turned into a movie; and "Chef Jeff Cooks" which is a cook book.

Dr. Muhammad Yunus

On February 5, 2009 Nobel Peace Prize winner Dr. Muhammad Yunus spoke on the campus of Fayetteville State University in Seabrook Auditorium. In conjunction with Dr. Yunus' engagement here, he also appeared at a dinner hosted by the FSU Center for Entrepreneurship and the Fayetteville-Cumberland County Chamber of Commerce. Dr. Yunus earned the prize in 2006 and shared it with Grameen Bank which he founded to help the poor with tiny loans called microcredit. The "Banker to the Poor," as Yunus is sometimes referred, established the Grameen Bank in Bangladesh in 1983 fueled by the belief that credit is a fundamental human right. The intent was to help poor people escape poverty by providing loans with suitable terms and teaching them sound financial principles. A small effort in the mid-1970s advanced to the forefront of a world movement of eradicating poverty through micro-lending. Replicas of the Grameen Bank model operate in more than 100 countries worldwide.

On February 17, 2009 Howard Nathaniel Lee spoke in Seabrook Auditorium. In his presentation he stated that the way for the US to maintain top world position, is for every child to receive a basic education. Lee is the first black to chair the North Carolina State Board of Education and was appointed to the position in 2003 by Gov. Mike Easley. He believes that education, beyond all other devices of human origin, is the great equalizer and frees one from the chains of society. A former university administrator, mayor and state legislator, Lee cited the state's drop-out and high school graduation rates as evidence for the need to do more in education. He felt that college students and fraternal organizations could serve as mentors and that technology would be vital in making student more competitive. He also indicated that early childhood programs could help address reading problems which teachers report to be the biggest weakness of students in today's classrooms. In closing Lee stressed that we can not rest on our laurels because without education jobs and opportunities will always go to others.

Howard Lee

As part of the Faculty Lecture Series, Dr. Freeman Hrabowski, III spoke in Shaw Auditorium on February 6, 2009. Sponsored by the Center for Innovation in Teaching and Learning, the lecture entitled "Bearing the Odds: Preparing Minority Students in Science and Engineering" focused on student success, encouraging diversity and success STEM programs, and the secret behind the success of the Meyerhof program. Dr. Hrabowski has served as President of the University of Maryland-Baltimore County and as a consultant to the National Science Foundation, the National Institutes of Health, the National Academies, and universities and school systems nationally. His research and publications focus on science and math education, with special emphasis on minority participation and performance. He has authored numerous articles and co-authored two books focusing on parenting and high-achieving African American males and females in science. Both books are used by universities, school systems, and community groups around the country.
